

Douglas called, and he saw the defendant struggling with Mr. Douglas, and who said to him on the road, "You are right, you are right," when the defendant said, "I am not a lawyer, but I am a man of law." Mr. Douglas then said, "I will do no more talk." Defendant stated he was a coolie employed by Messrs. Russell & Co. at the time of the trial, and that he was not a lawyer, but a man of law. He then stated that he was a coolie employed by Messrs. Russell & Co. at the time of the trial, and that he was not a lawyer, but a man of law. He then stated that he was a coolie employed by Messrs. Russell & Co. at the time of the trial, and that he was not a lawyer, but a man of law.

Remanded till the 27th, in order that proof may be brought up to show defendant was getting an honest living.

BECKER & MAY, ETC.
Nothing in the present trial.
Lui-yun and Chuan-sing were each fined $1, for bathing in the stream on Bonham Road. Second defendant put his fine, and the first not having the means to do so, went to bail for him.

Another man, A-sit, went to bail for four days, for bathing in the same stream.

GAMBLING.
Chun A-sing, a coolie, went to bail for fourteen days as a rogue and vagabond, found to be gambling in the Queen's West by Wong-yeung, a district watchman.

CUTTING AWAY EARTH.
Lui-hun-look and Yeung-a-mun each paid a fine of 50 cents, for cutting earth from a prohibited place in the Bonham Road.

REVENUES.
Chun-ying was charged under the following circumstances:—Chun-ying, a stevedore in the Central Market, stated he appeared as a witness against the defendant at that Court for stealing some notions. The defendant was charged with cutting away earth from a prohibited place in the Bonham Road.

A REAL LOTHAR.—The enterprise which Lothar contemplated, of erecting a building of the British religion in England, but which he abandoned at the time of his flight, has fallen into the hands of the young Duke of Norfolk, who is celebrating his arrival in the country by erecting a magnificent cathedral at Arundel. The cathedral is now in course of erection. The length of the nave will be 122 feet, and the building is to be characterized by grace and richness than by grandeur.

Mr. Gladstone would on occasion not hesitate to appeal to the mob against his present supporters. If he were to be outvoted on a proposal to give the House of Commons the right to elect its own members, he would not hesitate to appeal to the mob against his present supporters. On Monday last the Ministerial speakers confided themselves to the incident of the Warrent. Their opponents had no difficulty in proving that the procedure was nevertheless unconstitutional. There is of course a certain vagueness and ambiguity in the language of the Warrent, but the letter of the law and the Constitution, but any confusion which may exist is inseparable from institutions which have sprung from historical causes rather than from the mind of a single legislator. Mr. Gladstone's recent exploit is to be found in the new-fangled revival of obsolete vestiges and ceremonies which have of late years disturbed the tranquillity of the Church, but the spirit of the Warrent is not a legal and constitutional question.

The Administration of Alsace. A long article in the Algerian Zeitung sharply criticises the German system of administration in Alsace. There can be no doubt, says the writer, that the last few years have witnessed numerous symptoms of a hostile feeling among the people, the origin of which is to a certain extent attributable to the defects of the German administration. Such a feeling is not confined to the rules which are to be adopted by the Government in the future, but it is also to be found in the present. The Government through this management can only be understood by those who have seen the results of the German administration in Alsace. The writer, however, is not a Frenchman, but a German, and his opinion is not to be taken as a final verdict. The Independence of Alsace. A seizure has been made in some of the Belgian ports of a large quantity of contraband goods, consisting of a pamphlet written in English, and entitled "Civil War in France." It is a violent attack on the present French Government, and is attributed to the French Government, and is attributed to the French Government. The writer, however, is not a Frenchman, but a German, and his opinion is not to be taken as a final verdict.
